

Talking about smoking

If your child thinks smoking is cool, you will have to make the case against it. Don't attack; stay calm. Use the advice below to help them:

- Focus on instant bad effects of smoking, since they likely will not be worried about cancer that may happen years from now
- Talk about smelly breath, clothes, yellow nails and teeth
- Discuss its effect on breathing and sports
- Add up the money saved by not smoking—What could they spend that money on instead?

First talk about smoking when kids are young. It's easier to teach them than when they are teens.

- Ask your child if their friends smoke and how they feel about smoking
- Ask your child if they have ever been pressured by friends to try smoking. If they indicate that most of their friends don't smoke, emphasize that it's only a minority of kids who do.
- Carry out a penalty if they're caught smoking. Show the behavior is not allowed.
- Explain how strong the addiction to nicotine can become, and how people after smoking for several years may want to quit, but cannot do it without outside help.
- Encourage your child to:
 - Say “no” to tobacco like they do for drugs and alcohol, and
 - Practice what they'll say if offered a cigarette

The words should be their own. Make it clear and simple. Help them feel confident and prepared.
